

About the Author:

Anne Murray has had a life-long interest in birds, nature, history and different cultures. Born and educated in England, where she received her BSc (physics and geology), she has taught mathematics and science to every age group, and has lived in Papua New Guinea, Thailand and Alberta. For the last two decades, she has lived in Tsawwassen, British Columbia. Anne volunteers with several nature organizations, including Nature Canada, BC Nature and the Delta Farmland and Wildlife Trust. Among other awards for her conservation work, she was a recipient of the Queen's Golden Jubilee medal. Anne is married, with three daughters.

About the photographer:

Most of the colour photographs in A Heritage Guide to Boundary Bay are the work of David Blevins. His nature photography and academic work have grown out of his life long appreciation of the natural world. He strives to make images that show the unique character of the subject, whether it be wildlife behavior, the organization of a plant, or the natural patterns of landscapes. He created most of the photographs for this book while completing a Ph.D. in forest ecology at the University of British Columbia, Canada. He now lives in North Carolina where he continues to work on both academic and photography projects. More of his work can be viewed on his website www.blevinsphoto.com.
